The Bay of Islands Animal Rescue runs a desexing and vaccination programme in the Far North to benefit the stray animals that come into its care to ensure that animals that are rehomed are safely reintegrated into the community.

Our desexing programme is in place to ensure that less litters are born in a bid to reduce the pressure many of these animals end up placing on Council's pound system and the community. Desexing is also a high-priority endeavour as it assists in general compliance with Council's dog bylaw in that it helps to reduce the rate of dogs that end up roaming, helping to protect both dogs and the community.

In addition to the desexing programme, Bay of Islands Animal Rescue also focuses making sure that pets are vaccinated to ensure that the spread of diseases like parvo is slowed in our communities. While essential for the welfare of our animals, this also helps to reduce the stress on Council of treating and putting down infected dogs when they end up impounded.

To date, the Bay of Islands Animal rescue has rehomed more than 3,000 animals and has been working with the Far North District Council to save, treat and rehabilitate as many dogs from the Council pound as possible.
